

and Christianity and to the Jewish Biblical and Rabbinical self-understanding. Focus is put on the main events and special theological developments from the 2nd Century onwards. Special emphasis will be given to the Eastern European situation.

Ethics in a technical society

In this module we explore the basic relations between theological ethics and emerging technologies, focusing on our current ecological crisis. Field studies will be made in the Eco-Congregation Movement in Hungary. Students will get international insights through ECEN (European Christian Environmental Network) and involve ecumenical work by other similar movements.

Gospel on the periphery

This module introduces students to Missiology through integrating research practice with methodological and theoretical readings. Each student will conceptualize and execute a fieldwork project while developing practical mission skills among the Roma and the migrants.

Youth ministry

Youth ministry courses focus primarily on Christian Education in the local church and professional skills needed for Pastoral ministry and Teaching. Students will seek to integrate a theologically informed perspective with sound principles to create a philosophy of youth ministry.

The Faculty of Theology of Károli Gáspár University is a place where students and academics from Reformed persuasion meet, study the Holy Scriptures and experience Christian tradition together. Theology cannot stick in saying that „God exists”, but it also has to say who God is, what God wants with us and what God wants from this World.
